In keeping with our focus on environmental stewardship, Canyon Creek Cabinet Company's products are in compliance with the California Air Resources Board (CARB) requirements. Canyon Creek was an early adopter of Phase I, which took effect in 2009, and is fully compliant with Phase II, which was implemented in stages by 2012.

With the creation of its comprehensive CARB program, California has set one of the toughest standards in the world for placing limits on formaldehyde emissions in products, including building materials.

In order to be in compliance with the rules, cabinet manufacturers have to prove that their products—both foreign and domestic—are made from compliant materials through "chain of custody" third-party documentation from their suppliers.

Canyon Creek has gone beyond the CARB requirement by ensuring that all products—not just those shipped to California—are CARB-compliant.

In addition to requirements of CARB, Canyon Creek offers No Added Urea Formaldehyde (NAUF) cabinetry. Our conversion varnish finish has one of the lowest urea formaldehyde content levels in the cabinetry industry, and all our adhesives have NAUF. We will continue to provide sustainable wood species so that you can offer your customers the "green" cabinetry they've been asking for.

As the first cabinet company to be presented with the KCMA's Environmental Stewardship Program (ESP) certificate, Canyon Creek continues to demonstrate its commitment to environmental stewardship through its actions, products and programs. By systematically adopting the requirements set forth by CARB, Canyon Creek has reinforced its reputation of being forward-thinking and the environmental leader in the cabinet industry.
